Key Impacts

Precipitation: Precipitation will continue today before tapering off this evening. Rockslides and mudslides are still possible along mountain slopes and steep grades. Snow levels have fallen to 3500 feet with moderate snowfall expected over the Sierra today. Travel will be exceptionally difficult through mid-week.

Winds: Strong and gusty winds will continue in areas today and Wednesday. Winds will be capable of downing trees and powerlines, blowing debris, causing widespread and potentially prolonged power outages. Downed trees and powerlines could block roads and make travel difficult.

Flooding: The additional precipitation will lead to increased stress on levees, rivers, creeks and streams. Significant additional inflow to reservoirs, streams and mainstem rivers expected through midweek.

Outlook: A much needed break with drier weather will start Wednesday. Temperatures will remain cool with a few light showers off/on again. Next significant storm to impact CA will arrive Sunday/Monday.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weather system off shore will continue to stream at least some cloudiness across Northern California today. Fairly clear areas showing up this morning in the Sacramento Valley may fill in with more cloudiness again later today. Precipitation will continue today, but become more showery throughout the day. The mountains will continue to see the most precipitation. There is also a chance of a few thunderstorms today. Snow levels will drop to around 3000 ft in the north and 5500 ft in the south, but this is expected to happen after a lot of the precipitation is done. Strong, gusty southerly winds will be decreasing across the region today as well, but lingering over the higher elevations of our eastern areas, including the Modoc Plateau. Showers are expected to continue Wednesday into early Thursday before drier conditions show up later Thursday and Friday. Conditions seem likely to remain dry in the east Saturday, but precipitation may develop again in the western areas. Another rather cold weather system may arrive Sunday to bring more rain and mountain snow to Northern California.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The remnants of a Pacific storm will bring scattered showers to Central California through tonight. Most locations will receive less than a quarter inch of additional rainfall, but the Central Sierra and its associated foothills will receive between 0.50 and 1.50 inches of additional rainfall through tonight. The snow level will be around 6,000 feet. Southerly winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph with surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through this evening. Temperatures will be near normal today, with 40s to low 50s across the mountains and upper 50s and 60s in the valleys. Northwest flow aloft will end the precipitation across the area Wednesday and Thursday. The northwest flow aloft will also bring cooler temperatures, with 30s to low 40s across the mountains and 50s to low 60s in the valleys. Winds will become westerly 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph across the wind prone mountain and desert areas Wednesday and Thursday. Zonal flow will warm temperatures to near normal and bring light winds to the region Friday and Saturday. A couple of storms will bring periods of rain and below normal temperatures Saturday night through early next week. These storms will also bring strong south to west winds to the mountains and deserts Saturday night through early next week.
